Illegal puppy mill discovered in Tsuen Wan

① On Sunday, 65 dogs were rescued from an illegal puppy mill in Tsuen Wan. SPCA workers searched the puppy mill at 4 p.m. Between 4 p.m. and 7 p.m., volunteers
5 were taking the animals to veterinarians for care.

② Inside the puppy mill, animals were found in shocking conditions. The dogs were underfed. They didn't have fresh
10 water. They were also living in small, unclean cages. A number of the dogs required medical care to treat infections, broken limbs and diseases.

③ In contrast to reputable breeders, who take proper care of their dogs, puppy mills breed as many dogs as possible. This is to maximize the amount of money they make.
15 They do not care about the health of their dogs.

Two dogs were kept in a cramped cage.

④ Most of the dogs rescued from the puppy mill were 'designer breeds'. This included Miniature Poodles, Chihuahuas and Golden Retrievers. These are popular choices for puppy mill owners. This is 20 because of their popularity in Hong Kong and the high price of puppies.

⑤ Hong Kong is a hot spot for puppy mills due to lax animal welfare laws. However, in 2016, the government updated its laws to be stricter. All
25 individuals selling puppies must now have a licence.

⑥ Charles Leung, who owns an animal shelter called Happy Paws, is concerned these laws do not go far enough.

⑦ 'This is a great first step. However, there aren't strict rules in Hong Kong about cage
30 sizes. Many puppy mills can continue as normal.'

⑧ About 5,000 dogs are put down each year in shelters in Hong Kong. Many of them came from puppy mills and have serious health problems. Leung and many other shelter owners hope that people will choose to adopt dogs from shelters instead of buying from pet stores. 'The only way to put an end to puppy mills,' Leung says, 'is to stop giving 35 them our money.'

The living conditions of puppy mills in Hong Kong can be horrifying.

Dogs rescued from puppy mills often have serious health problems.
