Celebrations galore:

① What would you say is the festival of each year? Depending on where in the world you are, the answer can be very different. Take a look at these picks from different cultures around the year.

Songkran, the Thai New Year

5 ② This joyous occasion lasts from 13 to 15 April every year. 'Songkran' means 'passing' in Thai. It is used to mark the passing of a year.

③ These days, we know it as the Water Festival. People pour water over their elders' hands to show respect and give good wishes. Meanwhile, locals and foreigners alike have a great time throwing and spraying water at each other on the street. Thai people believe pouring water washes off the previous year's misfortune. It also promises a fresh start to the new year.

15 Midsummer, the Summer Solstice

④ The summer solstice is the day of the year with the most daylight. If you're very far north or south, that's almost 24 hours of sunlight!

Festivals around the globe:

Hanukkah, the 'Festival of Lights'

25 ⑥ People often call this eight-day holiday 'Jewish Christmas'. It falls between late November and late December.

⑦ Hanukkah celebrates the Jewish people's recovery of a temple from Greek rulers in 165 BC.

30 The Jews wanted to light candles in the temple. However, they only had one flask of pure olive oil for this customary act. It was supposed to burn out in one day, but managed to last for eight!

⑧ Nowadays, Jewish communities celebrate this
35 'miracle of the oil' by lighting eight candles. Hanukkah foods also relate to oil. This includes deep-fried recipes like latke—potato pancakes—and sufganiyah—jelly-filled doughnuts.

Eid al-Fitr, the 'Breaking of the Fast'

40 ⑨ This is one of two annual global Muslim festivals. It marks the end of Ramadan, a spiritual month when Muslims avoid eating in the daytime. Eid al-Fitr is a three-day celebration of prayer, exchanging presents and huge delicious feasts.

45 ⑩ The main themes of Eid al-Fitr are giving thanks, showing happiness and forgiveness. It is also a time of thoughtfulness. People give generously to charities and the poor.
