Amazing World Heritage Sites

- ① The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) selects important landmarks as World Heritage Sites each year. From beautiful natural landscapes to awe-inspiring manmade structures, these are bucket-list destinations for those who seek unique travel experiences. ‘Living museum’ Galapagos was selected as the first World Heritage Site in 1978 because of its exceptional diversity of wildlife. The Taj Mahal is included for its exceptional architectural excellence. As a symbol of classical spirit and civilization, the Acropolis at Athens has also made the list.

Galapagos Islands—a showcase of biodiversity

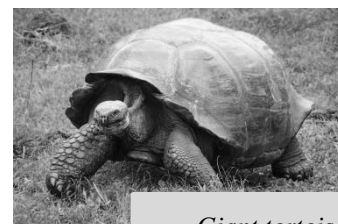

- ② It might be a bit tedious to get there but this archipelago of about 19 volcanic islands is a must-see for nature lovers. The islands are situated in the Pacific Ocean. They are known for their multifarious flora and fauna. These islands are a melting pot of unique wildlife. Visitors can get up close and personal with some of the rare animals. In fact, the puzzling variety of wildlife on these islands inspired the British biologist Charles Darwin, who developed his groundbreaking theory of evolution.
- ③ To reduce the human footprint on this unique environment, the government tries to restrict the number of visitors every year. If you are fortunate enough to be one, the giant tortoise, the largest species of tortoise on earth, is definitely something to check out. It has an average lifespan of 100 or more years. It can also weigh over 500 pounds!

25 Taj Mahal—love wrought in stones

④ Every year, whopping millions of visitors flock to the Taj Mahal, one of the universally admired masterpieces of the world's heritage. Anyone who has been to this site in India

30 knows just how stunning it is. The heartbreaking story behind this centuries-old building is, however, a lesser-known fact. In 1631, Mumtaz Mahal, wife of the emperor Shah Jahan, died in childbirth. Distraught at her

35 death, the emperor was determined to honour his beloved in a unique way. He could not think of anything better than to immortalize her with a magnificent tomb so that she would be remembered forever. When the emperor passed away in 1666, his body was placed next to his wife's inside the Taj Mahal.

⑤ Something that makes the Taj Mahal stand out is its amazing architecture. Constructed

40 of white marble, the building features a wonderful array of domes and arches. The artistic design was so sophisticated that it took more than 15 years to complete the construction.

Acropolis—the sacred rock of Athens

⑥ Greece is home to some of Europe's most fascinating historical sites. Perhaps none is

45 more enchanting than the Acropolis of Athens. This collection of buildings, which sits atop a rocky hill, shows us what life was like in ancient Greek society. Nobody knows for sure what group of people first lived on this hill. Some evidence suggests that the hill was already inhabited in 3500 BC. However, the most famous structures at the Acropolis, which showcased the wealth, splendour and power of Athens at its greatest peak, were not built

50 until around the fifth century BC.

⑦ Former temple the Parthenon is arguably the best-known structure at the Acropolis. This temple was built and dedicated to the city's patron goddess Athena, one of the most powerful divine residents of Olympus.
